

In the recent VESL workshop, Communicating in a Canadian Context, workshop participants explored some of the complexities and challenges of communicating in a different culture and language. Participants examined the model of a parent-teacher interview to discuss the communication challenges that new immigrants face.

This short video follows a family's parent-teacher interview with their child's grade four teacher. The video can help new immigrants learn about what to expect at a parent-teacher interview and shows how important the parent-teacher interview is. The video is available in 15 different languages and comes with a User's Guide for Parent-Teacher interviews.
